The Marines' Hymn

*From the Halls of Montezuma
To the shores of Tripoli;
We fight our country's battles
In the air, on land, and sea;
First to fight for right and freedom
And to keep our honor clean;
We are proud to claim the title
Of United States Marine.*

*Our flag's unfurled to every breeze
From dawn to setting sun;
We have fought in ev'ry clime and place
Where we could take a gun;
In the snow of far-off Northern lands
And in sunny tropic scenes;
You will find us always on the job
The United States Marines.*

*Here's health to you and to our Corps
Which we are proud to serve;
In many a strife we've fought for life
And never lost our nerve;
If the Army and the Navy
Ever look on Heaven's scenes;
They will find the streets are guarded
By United States Marines.*

In 1934, the Marine Corps introduced the PLC, selecting students from certain colleges that did not have a ROTC. In the spring of 1935, PLC was organized at Quantico and San Diego. Under this new program, college graduates were appointed Second Lieutenants in the Marine Corps Reserve after two six-week training periods. Lieutenant Colonel Clifton B. Cates, commanded the first 200 candidates at Quantico in July 1935. In July of 1940, Colonel Lemuel Shepard Jr headed a special unit tasked with training additional officer candidates. This unit became the OCC and received the mission to train potential officers “in the fundamentals of military discipline, and in the school of the soldier, squad, and platoon and to select those qualified for commission in order to provide capable and well-fitted officers for the Marine Corps Reserve.” On 1 November 1940, OCC-1 became the first class to graduate in Quantico.

The wartime demands of 1943 prompted the Commandant to establish temporary candidate detachments at Camp Elliot, California and at Camp Lejuene, North Carolina. The PLC was reestablished in 1944 and except for a temporary move to Parris Island, South Carolina in 1951, it has remained at Quantico. The addition of the PLC program to officer candidate training led to another reorganization, and in 1944, the Officer Candidates Class was renamed Officer Candidates School. TBS reopened in September 1945, and by 1947, through various reorganizations, had assumed responsibility for the training of all officer candidates, including those of the PLC and the NROTC. Coincident with these reorganizations, TBS moved from its first home on Barnett Avenue to Brown Field at the site of the old Airfield No. 1.

The history of Brown Field and its namesake is a prime example of the quality leader that Marine Officer Candidates strive to become. In 1921, Marine Aviator Second Lieutenant Walter Vernon Brown perished when his bi-plane crashed into the Potomac River. His leadership and care for his Marines was well known throughout his unit and it was that commitment to his Marines that led to a memorial being constructed and the airfield being named Brown Field. Officer Candidates School remains the caretaker of Second Lieutenant Brown’s memorial and honors his memory through welcoming guests to Brown Field, home of Officer Candidates School.

During World War II, potential Marine Corps Reserve women officers were trained at Mount Holyoke College and Smith College. The passage of the Women’s Armed Service Integration Act in 1948 enabled women Marines to serve for the first time as members of the regular establishment. In 1949, to accommodate this new requirement for women officers, the Women Officer Training Course was established under the cognizance of OCS.

TBS headquarters left Brown Field in early 1955 and relocated to Camp Upshur where it could be closer to its training activities. A newly formed unit, the Training and Test Regiment, took over the training activities remaining at Brown Field, and became the unit responsible for training officer candidates of the various officer procurement programs. On 1 June 1963, the regiment was re-designated the Officer Candidates School. The last reorganization occurred in 1977 when women officer training was placed under the cognizance of the Commanding Officer of Officer Candidates School. Those who are successful at Officer Candidates School have the privilege of leading and serving Marines.

The History of Officer Candidates School

The legacy of officer selection in the Marine Corps is rich with history and honor which developed over the past 125 years to its present day home of Brown Field in Quantico, Virginia. The current road to a commission as a Second Lieutenant in the Marine Corps at Officer Candidates School begins with one of several programs: The Officer Candidates Course (OCC), the Platoon Leaders Course (PLC), or the Naval Reserve Officer Training Corps (NROTC). Each course is a screening process with the mission to educate and train candidates in Marine Corps knowledge and skills in order to evaluate and screen individuals for the leadership, moral, mental, and physical qualities required for commissioning as a Marine Corps officer.

The origins of the first officer's training school began in 1891 when Marine Corps General Order No. 1 established the first formal resident school for Marine officers, the School of Application at Marine Barracks, Washington, D.C. Since its establishment, Marine Corps officer selection relocated to meet the man-power requirements of the era. In 1909, the school moved to the Marine Barracks at Annapolis, Maryland and was renamed the Marine Officers' School; and, in 1910, it moved to Norfolk, Virginia. The U.S. involvement in World War I presented the need for an increase in the size of all the Armed Services and the Marine Corps was no exception. To meet this need for qualified officers to serve with the American Expeditionary Forces in Europe, a decision was made to move the instructional effort to Quantico where individual replacements and new units were being formed for the war. Quantico was where all new officers went and the Officers Camp of Instruction, organized at Quantico in July 1917, was the place they received their training. Its original location was near Barnett Avenue, approximately one-half mile south of what is now the town of Quantico. In April of 1918, the school was formalized and titled the Officers Training Camp.

In the fall of 1919, the Commanding General of Marine Base Quantico, Major General John A. Lejeune, established the Marine Corps Officers Training School and the Marine Officers Infantry School. These two schools were subsequently combined in 1920 to become the Marine Officers Training School. By 1922, this school had further evolved into the Field Officers Course (modeled after the Army's Command and General Staff School) and the Company Officers Course, both designed to teach tactics, topography, law, administration, and engineering, among other subjects. A third course, called The Basic School (TBS) was designed to indoctrinate new Marine Lieutenants in the duties of infantry leaders.

It was during this period, having proved itself on the battlefields of France, that a still growing Marine Corps began recruiting potential officers from colleges and universities through the NROTC program. Second Lieutenants commissioned from the U.S. Naval Academy, NROTC units, and qualified enlisted Marines who had been commissioned reported to TBS for instruction. Officer training continued to expand and, in 1924, TBS moved to Philadelphia due to a shortage of suitable classrooms and officers billeting in Quantico.
